Alaska Blackcod

Alaska Blackcod Anoplopoma fimbria

Alaska blackcod is a unique whitefish with a high oil content and a distinctive rich flavor. Also known as sablefish, this species is prized for its flaky, white meat, succulent taste and melt-in-your-mouth texture.

The fats in blackcod include a significant amount of omega-3 oils, which have been shown in numerous medical studies to have significant health benefits with regard to a number of diseases and conditions.

Alaska has the largest stocks of blackcod in the world. The fish is most often caught by longline, and bled and iced at point of catch. A limited amount of fish is also taken by pots. Alaska's conservative fisheries management regulations will ensure a sustainable harvest of blackcod now and in the future.

Blackcod is often served lightly smoked or in Asian applications. Although its taste and texture are distinctive, the fish adapts easily to a wide variety of cuisines.
